

CITIZEN BENJAMIN HARRISON

After Four Years of Faithful Service Indiana's Son Gives Up the Presidency.

His Retirement from Office Accompanied by the Kindest Wishes for His Future Welfare of all the People of Washington.

His Journey to the Hoosier Capital Begun at 4:07 Yesterday Afternoon.

Will Spend Sunday at Pittsburg and Arrive at Indianapolis About 10:30 Monday Morning—His Last Day in Office.

GENERAL HARRISON.

Last Day as President and Departure from the White House for Indianapolis.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—When President Harrison entered the Senate chamber today, just before the oath was administered to Vice President Stevenson, he surprised those who have been conversant with what he has done the past week, by looking not only well but hearty. Four years of time and bitter griefs have whitened his hair, added a few wrinkles to his face; but there is a ruddiness in his countenance, a glow in his cheeks, a brightness in his eyes and a firmness in his step which speak health and strength. President Harrison wore a suit of black, a Prince Albert coat buttoned full to his high collar, a black cloth overcoat, with an edging of dark fur, and a silk hat with a deep mourning band. He is in the prime of health for a man of fifty-nine, and when one considers what he has passed through during the week just closed, the splendid constitution of Indiana's ex-President is emphasized.

General Harrison practically held a public reception at the White House on every week day of this week. There has been a perfect stream of callers. Added to these manifold social duties has been an enormous amount of work, which has come to him from Congress and the executive departments. There were thousands of men, women and children present at the last public reception held by him on Thursday afternoon. Every night this week he has been on duty till 11 or 12 o'clock. Last night General Harrison, after entertaining at dinner Mr. and Mrs. Cleveland, returned to his private office and entered into consideration of bills which had been passed by Congress and awaited his signature. This work is taxing in the extreme. It requires the closest mental application, the most exhaustive physical effort. It was long past midnight when he had attached his signature to the last of the bills before him. All other members of the family had retired. Knowing that he must be up at an early hour this morning, the most memorable day to him since he entered the White House, he threw himself upon a lounge and slept without undressing.

LAST MEAL AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

Congress was in session all of last night. At 6 o'clock this morning a servant entered the President's room and awakened him. No sooner had President Harrison made his toilet than he was presented with an armful of bills sent from the Capitol. He sat down and began to run over them. Then there was a knock. It was for breakfast. It will be many years before, if ever, General Harrison forgets that meal. It was the last one he ate in the house which promised so much happiness with his people, but which has been so constant with grief. Mr. and Mrs. McKee and the two children were present. There was an effort at enjoyment, but the events of four years crowded memory, and at times there were tears silently stealing down saddened cheeks.

Just four years ago this evening the Harrison family, full of promise, happiness and long years of hope, ate its first meal in the White House. There were present the President, Mrs. Harrison, their son and daughter, the grandchildren and others less directly connected by blood. It was a happy family—with health and distinction, and good cheer everywhere. Nothing was suggestive of the events which have since transpired. The contrast this morning, when the last meal was partaken of, could not have been much greater. A half hour after breakfast found President Harrison at his desk, looking over bills from Congress, signing official documents, receiving telegrams and callers.

Mrs. McKee at once set about to put the White House in perfect order for the new occupants. Fresh cut flowers were brought from the conservatory and placed in vases in almost every room and corridor about the house—palms and other pot plants were brought forth and added to those already distributed about the mansion until the grand old house was made to look like a new one. The chief instructions for the preparation of an elaborate luncheon for President and Mrs. Cleveland. It was to be ready by the time they reached the White House from the Capitol after the inauguration. In the preparation of this Mrs. McKee gave personal attention.

At 10:30 the Cabinet arrived in carriages, ready to go to the Capitol. At 11 Mr. Cleveland drove up for the President, and shortly the latter entered the carriage, and the little procession started to the white building on the hill. The President did not enter it again as the chief magistrate—that is, not under four years at least—made straightway to the Capitol. Mrs. McKee was hurrying on in the executive mansion. There had been left undone nothing that labor, or genius, or expense could conceive to conduce to attractiveness, or the comfort or happiness of President and Mrs. Cleveland.

The courtesies extended by General Harrison and Mrs. McKee to their successors have surpassed everything in the history of changes of administration, and it is tonight the talk of Washington. They have not only shown kindness and courtesies, but a courtesies which will mark a new era in outgoing and incoming administration etiquette. After the inauguration, and when Mrs. Cleveland and her mother, Mrs. Perrine, went forth to the White House from the Capitol, they were met by Mrs. McKee and given a cordial welcome. Colonel Lamont had only a short time before arrived with baby Ruth, and everything was indeed homelike to Mrs. Cleveland.

Baby Benjamin Harrison McKee and his little sister Mary Lodge McKee were taken to the residence of Postmaster-general Wanamaker during the forenoon, so that Mrs. McKee was the only member of Gen. Harrison's family present in the White House upon the arrival of the new mistress, Mrs. Cleveland and her mother were made at home, and shortly the President and the ex-President arrived. The latter only lingered long enough to bid his successor and Mrs. Cleveland good-bye, and telegraphed Mrs. McKee into the carriage and were driven directly to the residence of Postmaster-general and Mrs. Wanamaker, where all elaborate luncheon was spread, and where were gathered the members of the old Cabinet, their wives and a few immediate friends. The luncheon was a sort of "lo feast," where expressions of affection were made and tears mingled with the good-byes.

It was 3:45 o'clock before the luncheon was over, the good-byes were all said and the distinguished son of Indiana entered a carriage with the remnant of his little family and was driven to the Pennsylvania railroad station to begin his journey homeward. He was accompanied to the station by Acting Secretary of State Wharton, Secretary of the Treasury Foster, Secretary of War Elkins, Secretary of the Navy Tracy, Secretary of Agriculture Rusk, Postmaster-general Wanamaker and Attorney-general Miller. The Cabinet officers, with the exception of Secretary Noble, were accompanied by their wives. The ex-President's immediate party comprised Mr. and Mrs. McKee, their children, Benjamin and Mary McKee, Lieutenant Parker and Mary Tracy, Secretary of the Navy Tracy, Postmaster-general Wanamaker and Marshall Randall. The Pennsylvania special was in the station ready to start when the party arrived.

It consists of but three cars, a Pullman sleeper, a combination and a private parlor car.

When the carriages containing the ex-President and his friends rolled up to the station there were gathered a number of those who wished to re-emphasize their personal esteem for the great statesman by seeing him away and by expressing in words to him their well wishes. It was but a few minutes before all were aboard. The train is to run through to Indianapolis. It is under the personal supervision of Mr. George W. Boyd, the assistant general passenger agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, who has for years been a warm personal friend to General Harrison, and accompanied him upon most of his journeys during the past four years. Mr. Boyd will direct the running of the special train till it reaches the Hoosier capital.

The ex-President's party consisted, as it pulled out of the station at 4:07, amid cheers, and the waving of handkerchiefs, of ex-President Harrison, Mr. and Mrs. J. R. McKee, baby Benjamin and Mary Lodge McKee and their nurse, Lieut. John Parker, George W. Boyd, Marshal Dan M. Randall and Mr. E. F. Tibbott, who has been the President's personal stenographer for four years and proven himself the most capable of the many attaches of the White House.

The train will run as a second section of the Pennsylvania limited express, which leaves here for the West at 11 o'clock. It is not expected to stop between Washington and Pittsburg, except at Baltimore, York, Harrisburg and Altoona. It will arrive at Pittsburg about 11 o'clock to-night, and be side-tracked in a quiet suburb of the Smoky City. The party will sleep on the train to-night, and breakfast in it on Sunday morning. General Harrison is opposed to traveling on Sunday, and to-morrow morning it has been arranged that the Rev. J. P. E. Kumer, a Presbyterian minister at Pittsburg, and an old friend of the Harrison family, will call and escort General Harrison and Mrs. McKee to church. They will take luncheon or dinner with Mr. Kumer, and at night-time return to the special train. A late supper will be served on the train, and some time after the limited express has passed Pittsburg for the West on the Pennsylvania, the special will renew its journey.

The schedule of time arranged by Col. Boyd will take the party into Indianapolis about 10:30 o'clock on Monday morning. A reception committee is expected to meet the President at Richmond, Ind., at 8 or 8:30 o'clock, and accompany him to his home.

Lieutenant Parker and Colonel Boyd will leave Indianapolis for the East some time during the afternoon or evening of Monday. Marshal Randall, however, will remain in Indianapolis some days before returning to Washington. It is now understood that Marshall Randall will serve out his term of office here, his commission expiring about a year hence. His deputy, Capt. John K. Leonard, will be retained in his present position under Marshal Randall's successor, in all probability.

FOUR OR FIVE HOURS LATE.

PITTSBURG, March 5.—At 1 o'clock the Pennsylvania railroad officials here report ex-President Harrison's train between four and five hours late. It is expected to arrive about 5 o'clock A. M.

TRIBUTES TO THE HARRISONS.

An Independent Newspaper Reflects the Sentiments of the People of Washington.

Special to the Indianapolis Journal.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—To-day's Washington Post, a thoroughly independent journal, has two leading editorials on the Harrison, which are expressive of public sentiment at the national capital, irrespective of party lines. Under the caption "Mr. Harrison's Retirement," the Post says: "In retiring from the presidency Mr. Harrison bears with him the respect of his fellow-citizens and their kindest wish for his future welfare. He leaves an official record honorable and reputable throughout. Since he entered upon the single service four years ago there has taken place a somewhat notable revolution in party politics, indicating a popular reaction as to certain pending issues, but there has been no abatement on the part of the President of his consistent and conscientious devotion to duty. Whether always right or occasionally wrong, as judged from different standpoints, he has pursued the even and dispassionate tenor of his way without catering to consideration of expediency in his own behalf or losing balance in the presence of difficult responsibilities. It was not a vote of want of confidence in Benjamin Harrison as man or President by which he failed of reelection; it was rather a lapse of faith in the legislative than in the administrative branch of the government that wrought upon the public mind and reversed the verdict of 1888. More nearly than any of his predecessors has Mr. Harrison been brought to the hearts of the people by reason of the many domestic afflictions that have befallen his own and his official household. One touch of nature makes the whole world akin, and the apothem is peculiarly applicable in the present instance."

To the text, "as to the White House ladies," the Post says this among other things complimentary: "Washington is very sorry to part with the ladies of Mr. Harrison's household. They have spent four years here, and in that time have won the esteem, the good will and, where circumstances permitted, the affection of us all. They have built up within those august precincts which lend themselves so readily to ostentation the perfect model of an American home. They have shown us the family circle at its sweetest and its best, avoiding display with a genuine love of sympathy and an instinctive avoidance of the vulgar. They have illustrated the finest aspect and possibilities of our institutions, by proving that the family of the greatest and most powerful ruler of the world can be, without sacrifice of dignity and influence, as genuine, as unpretentious, as devoted and as happy as the family of the lowliest citizen. We thank them for the noble and useful example they have set. We shall remember and regret them long after they have been forgotten. We, and when Mr. Harrison himself will for them have faded into a nebulous haze. In Indianapolis, as in Washington, wherever they may be, they will surround themselves with tenderness."

Baby Cured Scall Head

Bad Case. Two Doctors No Good. Tried Cuticura. First Set Helped. Four Sets Completely Cured.

Our baby Pearl was born Nov. 29, 1891. From her birth she had scall head until she was four months old, then it became worse and came out in small white pimples, and the scalp began to be large yellow scales. We tried two doctors, but they could not do it any good. So we tried Cuticura Remedies, giving her a thorough washing three times a day, and then using the Cuticura.

The first set we tried brought relief, and we used four sets. She was perfectly cured. At the age of six months our baby weighed thirty-four pounds. Her skin is fair and smooth, and scalp perfectly well. Portrait enclosed. I would not do without Cuticura Remedies, and can recommend them as most excellent for children.

MRS. SETH J. JUBB, Vanderburgh, Ind.

I used the Cuticura Remedies for about two months and the entire cure was but $5, which no mother would regret for a nice smooth skin. It left my face in the best of conditions, free from all pimples and blotches. I still use the Cuticura Soap, and always shall.

THE WANAMAKER SALE

Stands first in the history of memorable sales. It distances—outclasses—anything heretofore known in English-speaking countries. It is not every day that firms like Wanamaker & Brown are forced out of business. It is not often that a stock of such unquestioned excellence can be bought out at any price, and it is certainly a most remarkable thing for such a stock of fine goods to be bought at only a fraction of their value, at a price which meant over $100,000 worth of goods for much less than half that sum. We had the pluck, the money, the nerve to buy one-half of this enormous stock. The immense crowds that have attended this sale prove most conclusively that the public appreciates the bargains we are offering in this WANAMAKER HALF-PRICE SALE.
